Russia's current policy views toward the Korean peninsula as a strategic forward base for Russian interests. It is also concerned about the potential for the reunification of Korea to undermine the balance of power in East Asia.

In the context of the United Nations, Russia has repeatedly stated its support for the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula and the peaceful resolution of the Korean issue. It has also supported efforts to improve relations between North and South Korea.

Russia has also been engaged in efforts to stabilize the situation in the Korean peninsula through diplomatic channels. It has played a role in mediating between North and South Korea in talks aimed at reducing tensions and building confidence.

In summary, Russia's role in the Korean peninsula is complex and multifaceted. It seeks to maintain its strategic interests in the region while supporting efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Korean issue.

References: